BEA Union Investment Global Quality Bond Fund ("QB")

Pursue sector and geographical diversification to lower portfolio volatility; Focus on quality Investment-grade short-term corporate bonds

Highlights:

- 1. Tariff whiplash hits investor sentiment, bolster safe-haven assets; holds US Treasury for high liquidity
- 2. US, UK, China, Japan and South Korea present attractive opportunities, including financial bonds
- 3. Chinese investment-grade bonds performed well on improving overall prospects

Fund Features

- A global bond fund focuses on investment-grade bonds
- Primarily invests in short-term bonds and aims to minimize price volatility

Market Review & Outlook

The Trump administration's flip-flopping tariff policies dampened consumer sentiment, sending investors into a risk-off mode. This shift supported safe-haven assets, including US Treasuries, resulting in a more than 30 basis points drop in the 10-year US Treasury yield in February.

The February US non-farm payroll report came in close to expectations, and the unemployment rate remained largely stable. However, recent job data signalled a weakening labour market. Additionally, we anticipate further job losses in the government sector over the next six months, including among private sector government contractors. The market is currently pricing in three potential rate cuts by the Fed this year, driven by concerns over slowing growth resulting from tariffs. This outlook could bode well for defensive assets.

Fund Report (Mar 2025)

Despite a challenging and murky global outlook, our team continues to identify investment opportunities in high-quality, short-term investment-grade bonds across various sectors and regions to mitigate volatility. Among them, US and UK banks continue to exhibit resilience. We believe that the leading players should be well-positioned to withstand any economic slowdown risk, supported by their strong capital and liquidity positions. Their strong credit fundamentals will underpin the prospect for their bonds.

In Asia, investment-grade dollar bonds were mostly supported by lower US Treasury yield in February. Given the macroeconomic uncertainty, we remain constructive in Asia credits and continue to identify compelling opportunities across various sectors. In February, spreads of Japanese bank bonds widened on the prospect of increasing new issuance. Meanwhile, spreads for South Korean financial and corporate bonds tightened, supported by lower-than-expected new supplies. Chinese investment-grade bonds performed well with spreads narrowing, particularly for technology, media and telecommunications bonds. China has shown improvement on multiple fronts, with its macroeconomic conditions stabilizing, positive developments in the AI space, and abating concerns over property defaults. This overall improvement in investment sentiment has boosted the performance of China's dollar bond market.

Investment Strategy

The Fund continues to focus on quality, short duration bonds as the Fed is not in a hurry to cut rates in the near term. Also, short-term bonds are less sensitive to interest rate movements, offering a buffer should Trump's policies trigger inflationary pressure that impact the trajectory of monetary policy.

The Fund invests in short-term US Treasuries for their high liquidity and defensive nature, and finds attractive opportunities in good-quality, short-term US and UK investment-grade financial bonds.

In Asia, we continue to focus on further geographical diversification to countries with cheaper valuations. In China, the Fund remains constructive on sectors including financials, technology, energy and materials. Furthermore, the Fund identifies opportunities across Japanese banks and corporate in various sectors, such as consumer staples. In South Korea, banks, technology, communications, property, and materials also present compelling investment prospects.
